

Abstract

An apparatus for manipulating fluid samples is described. The apparatus comprises a micro-chip device having at least a first and second covered channel with openings at either end of said first and second covered channel. The first and second covered channels intersect to form a common intersection. In use at least three of the openings to said first and second covered channels are connected to a multi-port valve to control the pressure in the device.

